Immediately following the merger, the agreement with Element 21 provides that BRL will implement a two for one forward stock split and change its name to Element 21 Golf Company. Holders of one pre split BRL share on the record date will be eligible to receive a second BRL share resulting from the forward two for one split of BRL, two shares of Tech Ventures and a single share of Advanced Conductor Technologies. Upon closing, the current BRL directors and officers will resign. Dr. R. Bruce Reeves, the current President and CEO of BRL Holdings, Inc. will retain his position the completion of the merger. Founders of Element 21 Golf Company have spent years researching and developing golf shafts and golf clubs made from scandium. Scandium is the 21st element in the Periodic Table of Elements and when alloyed with aluminum has a much higher, strength-to-weight ratio than titanium. Scandium alloy golf clubs provide superior feel and workability for the player. The Company's objective is to develop and market new golf products where scandium alloys can provide measurable advantages over existing high-end golf clubs made of titanium, stainless steel and composite materials.

Scandium is a little known element developed in secret aerospace programs in the former Soviet Union. It was used as an additive to aluminum alloys to create the highest strength aluminum-scandium alloys and alloys with significantly enhanced weldability. These super-alloys are used in Russian missiles; MIG-29, MIG-31 and SU-37 jet fighters as well as in components of the Space Station.

Scandium aluminum alloys for sports applications were developed using the expertise of Russian and Ukrainian scientific institutes. In 1997 Easton Sports baseball and softball bats was the first production of a large-scale scandium sports product. The ultra-light, high strength Easton bats, known as the Scandium/Sc 7000 Redline series, quickly became the most successful new product launch in Easton's 75-year history. Scandium has also been used in bicycle frames and bicycle handlebars. The lightweight scandium frame is now used by many top racing teams. In addition to baseball bats and bicycle frames, scandium lacrosse sticks, hockey stick and other sports equipment prototypes have been developed.

Scandium golf products have outstanding potential in the golf industry. Results of player and robotic testing indicated scandium aluminum alloys' superior performance over leading titanium clubs. Scandium alloys have 55% reduced density and 22% specific strength advantage over titanium thus allowing a larger sweet spot for more consistency and accuracy. The reduced density and improved strength allows flexibility in placing perimeter weighting that can affect the trajectory of the ball. The specific yield strength advantage of scandium alloys over steel and high-end aluminum alloys enables the design of shafts at substantially reduced weight.
