PRESENTATION

Operator

Good morning and thank you for standing by. Welcome to Abbott's third-quarter 2016 earnings conference call.

Scott Leinenweber - Abbott Laboratories - VP of IR

* * * * *

As you'll recall, Abbott issued a press release on April 28, 2016, announcing the transaction with St. Jude Medical, and a related press release on October 18, 2016. Please refer to those releases for additional important information about Abbott, St. Jude, and related matters.

Miles White - Abbott Laboratories - Chairman and CEO

At the same time, we continued to actively and strategically shape our portfolio. In September, we took the next logical step in shaping our medical device business with the announcement that we will sell our medical optics business to J&J. This action is in line with our strategic decision to sharpen our focus on building leadership in cardiovascular devices.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Mike Weinstein - JPMorgan - Analyst

Understood. I'm going to just ask a question about 2017. And Miles, I know you are not going to give 2017 guidance, but I just want to think about the framework for it. When we had the call to announce the St. Jude acquisition, and then on the call that you and I had back in June, you talked about the goal of the Company historically of delivering double-digit underlying EPS growth, which is to say that's 10%; and that the goal for 2017 would be to try and deliver that. And then on top of it, you get the accretion from the transactions. Obviously we don't know yet what's going to happen with Alere, but it looks like St. Jude is on track to close.

If we think about the base business piece of that, given that nutritional is obviously looking weaker than it was six months ago; the device business is looking better, so there's some pluses and minuses -- is the underlying business on track to deliver 10% next year? And is the right way to think about 2017 the underlying 10%-plus the accretion, or should we back off of the underlying expectations? Thanks.

Miles White - Abbott Laboratories - Chairman and CEO

Well, I'd say, first of all, you're right. It's too early to be giving 2017 guidance, or even be able to be precise about it. But I would say, look, the underlying growth does continue to be strong in our businesses.

* * * * *

So I'd tell you that I see the underlying growth continuing to be strong. Clearly that will have some impact on us. But at this point, I think we're seeing great growth in our pharmaceutical business. We're in the midst of preparing to launch a number of new systems and diagnostics. FreeStyle Libre, I'd say, is going gangbusters in Europe, and we're looking forward to having that in the US shortly. There's a lot of new product launch and approval happening, so there's a lot of drivers of growth here.

And, frankly, I think there's a lot of growth to be seen in St. Jude as well. So, I remain kind of in the same position.

* * * * *

If you look at the US -- which I think everybody has become accustomed to ignoring in the numbers -- the US is having a better year than planned, better year than in a long time, and it's better than solid. So, I think there's a lot of things happening that offset China to some degree, so I'd caution this way: I'd say, look, we always start the year looking for double-digit earnings growth. And, yes, we will have the addition of St. Jude on top of that. And as you said, Alere remains to be seen.

* * * * *

Mike Weinstein - JPMorgan - Analyst

Perfect. I'll let some others jump in. Thank you, Miles.

Miles, two questions on St. Jude. The deal is on track to close by the end of this year. But in the third quarter you had a cyber security report issued. You had St. Jude issue an advisory regarding battery depletion of some of its older [ICs]. I know you've been in contact with St. Jude, but maybe talk about what gives you the confidence that these issues will not impact St. Jude's business, post- the deal close. And then I had a follow-up.

Miles White - Abbott Laboratories - Chairman and CEO

Well, what I'd tell you so far is I think the St. Jude has handled all this pretty well, pretty thoroughly; and not only in terms of their taking it seriously, their own investigations, the third-party consultants and investigators that they've worked with and employed. I have to say they definitely put patient safety and patient credibility and physician credibility and the product performance and so forth, first, and that's right. And I think they've done all the right things. They've been in great communication with us.

And based on everything that we know, I don't see this impacting the close of the deal, or the business long-term. I've seen a lot of speculation in the press. And every time there's a product issue or a hiccup or whatever it may be, everybody wants to run to the headlines and speculate about the deal. I'll tell you, based on everything I see, this deal is going to close. And determined by the timing of the regulatory approval, it's probably going to close by year end. And I haven't seen anything to date that would suggest otherwise.

Regarding the performance of the company after that, I'll tell you honestly, what I'm most anxious for is for their MRI compatible claim to be approved by the FDA in the US. And frankly, if you look at the rest of their businesses, they are all growing at a pretty healthy rate, and particularly overseas. And I think their success overseas has demonstrated that when they do get their MRI compatible claim in the US, that their recovery of share, recovery of growth rate, et cetera, there should be pretty strong. So, I haven't changed my expectations about the performance of St. Jude going forward.

And I can probably someday give you my opinion about the current circumstances with the cyber security claims and so forth. But I'll keep my thoughts to myself right now, and we'll wait till the deal is closed.

Glenn Novarro - RBC Capital Markets - Analyst

Okay. And just a quick follow-up. St. Jude is going to be accretive to 2017. But your accretion calculations, did it contemplate the divestitures that you just announced to Terumo? Thanks.

Miles White - Abbott Laboratories - Chairman and CEO

Yes; in a fashion, Glenn, it has.

I wanted to focus a little bit on the core business. We already talked about nutrition, but maybe you could just discuss some updated thoughts on how you think the diagnostics business at Abbott could perform over the next few periods of the Alinity launch. And how things are going in medical devices, and some specifics on Absorb and MitraClip and other moving parts there.

With regard to medical devices, also pleased. I can start at the top. Let me mention in medical optics, where I think the cadence of new products and the performance of that R&D team has been exceptional, and particularly even recently with the launch of the Symphony intraocular lenses.

And a while we have made a deal to sell that business to J&J, we sell it in great shape with great products, great technology. They are gaining share in the cataract and intraocular lens business. I'm really pleased with what the team has been able to do there, and I think the business will be in a strategically great home at J&J.

We think we got fair value for the business, and we're working on the integration transition of that to J&J. But I think they've been innovative. They've had a great cadence of new product development over time. I realize that that's mostly to the benefit now of J&J's shareholders. But the point is, across our businesses we're seeing productivity out of our R&D and new product development like we've never seen before.

Edgar Filing: ST JUDE MEDICAL INC - Form 425

Our medical device business will certainly be enhanced by the addition of St. Jude. But at the same time, I think there's a lot of good things happening in our vascular business. MitraClip is going well. Supera is going well. We continue to do well in our stent business in what is otherwise not a growth business. We still remain the world leader in that category, and Absorb has been licensed and launched in the United States.

So, I think across the board in diagnostics and devices, without exception, even including AMO, all these businesses have shown, in the last few years, real progress, real progress. Tangible progress in R&D, in innovation, in development, and meeting their timelines in a disciplined fashion, bringing new products to market.

And we're seeing all that roll out now and over the next couple of years. And frankly, I think it will be sustained after that. Now, having said that, I expect the same out of our St. Jude piece, and I think there's nothing but good there. So we are pretty bullish about.
