Final Transcript: Interview with John Standley

John Standley

Rite Aid is merging with Albertsons because it transforms us from a regional pharmacy player to a leader in food, health and wellness.

It positions us for growth in a number of ways. First of all, the stronger free cash flow that we are going to have would allow us to invest back in the business, to not only to maintain our existing store base but to develop our business, our omni-channel capabilities. Two is, it strengthens those omni-channel capabilities bringing together what Rite Aid is doing today in the omni-channel space with home delivery of prescriptions and our online store and combining that with the capabilities that Albertsons has with home delivery, both with their own home delivery service and also their relationship with InstaCart and things like Plated. Plated is a meal kit service that we can use in our pharmacies to meet the dietary needs of our patients.

Bringing together our two Owned brand portfolios will have a real impact on how we go forward with the business, so the opportunity to bring O Organic, and Open Nature and other Albertsons brands into the Rite Aid store, the opportunity to bring Rite Aid's general merchandise and HBC products into the Albertsons store and improve merchandising on both sides of the organization should have a real impact on our top line as well as our profitability.

But we've also got a really exciting revenue opportunity here and a big part of that builds around the pharmacy network and our PBM, EnvisionRXOptions, and the ability to work with EnvisionRXOptions and other payors in the marketplace to build preferred networks that will help steer patients and customers into our network of pharmacies and stores. The value of that pharmacy customer is very significant. When we look at Albertsons, a pharmacy customer there spends three times more than the non-pharmacy customer, and that's actually two times more when you take out the pharmacy basket from that shop, so that is a very valuable customer to Albertsons.

We are targeting revenue growth at 3 ½ to 4 ½ percent over the next three years and we are targeting adjusted EBITDA growth to 11 to 15 percent over the next 3 years. So when you bring together our plan that we worked so hard to build as a standalone company at Rite Aid stir in all the opportunities, the synergies that are created from this very compelling combination with Albertsons, bring in the financial momentum that Albertsons is building in their organic growth over the next few years and put it all together, it really delivers the type of strong growth that we are talking about here over the next three years.
