Professional Diversity Network and LinkedIn

Team Up to Help Companies Tap Into Diverse Professionals and

Comply with New Diversity Regulations

Chicago, IL February 14, 2013 Professional Diversity Network (PDN), a Chicago-based diversity recruitment firm, and LinkedIn, the leading professional network on the Internet with more than 200 million members, have teamed up to help companies recruit diverse professionals. PDN manages a suite of professional networking websites that target diverse professional groups, including African Americans, Latinos, Asian Americans, women, LGBT, veterans, and people with disabilities.

PDN Chief Executive Officer Jim Kirsch said that a shared belief in the power of professional networks brought the two entities together.

American companies now recognize that in order to be competitive, their employees must reflect an increasingly diverse population and customer base. As recruiters and professionals continue to migrate to professional networks to find diverse candidates and network, advance their careers and build their professional brands, PDN understands that traditional job boards are no longer an adequate means of building the workforce of the future.

Kirsch added that beyond dramatic changes in the demographics of the global marketplace, the need for a more diverse workforce is now more immediate due to more stringent government diversity compliance standards. PDN's established marketplace for diverse professionals and groups will help LinkedIn's customers improve compliance with government regulatory bodies, including the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs.

Under the arrangement, LinkedIn's customers will be able to post jobs on the PDN network of seven websites serving over two million diverse professionals:

iHispano.com, serving Hispanic professionals
