ING in Society 2002: Trust is central theme

Today, ING reports for the eighth consecutive year to its stakeholders about the progress made in the field of corporate social responsibility and sustainability. It is the third time that this report is being published internationally under the name ING in Society . The central theme of this year s report is trust.

Given the nature of our services, trust is the basis for a long-term relationship between ING and its stakeholders. In order to deal with this trust in a respectful way, ING advocates a transparent business model that does justice to the interests of all stakeholders and increases the dialogue with them. In 2002 we took a step forward by developing a new corporate governance structure, which was implemented in 2003. This has among other things resulted in increased shareholder influence, says Ewald Kist, chairman of the Executive Board of ING Group. ING is and will remain the strong financial partner which several generations have relied on for 150 years.

In 2002, ING decided to review its Business Principles and to determine whether a principle should be added on Human Rights and Sustainable Business Development. Compared to previous years, the report is more closely aligned with the guidelines set out by the Global Reporting Initiative (GRI) for sustainability reporting. Thus, the financial basis of the reporting has been strongly improved.

Furthermore, ING has also recently decided to commit itself to the Equator Principles , together with a number of leading, globally operating banks. This means that ING will comply with the sustainability regulations for financing various large-scale projects in developing countries as set by the International Finance Corporation, a subsidiary of the World Bank.
