About OrthoLogic Corp.

OrthoLogic is currently an orthobiologics drug-development company focused on commercializing several potential therapeutics comprising the Chrysalin® Product Platform, a series of potential drug products aimed at treating traumatic and chronic orthopedic indications in both bone and soft tissue. All of these potential products are based on the Chrysalin synthetic peptide, also known as TP508, licensed from CBI.

OrthoLogic owns options on all worldwide orthopedic rights to the peptide, and is actively pursuing five orthopedic indications for Chrysalin. These include fracture repair and spine fusion, which are in human clinical trials, and cartilage defect repair, which is in late-stage preclinical trials. Ligament and tendon repair indications are in the preclinical planning stage, with studies planned to initiate in 2004.

On April 29, 2004, OrthoLogic announced that it signed a definitive agreement to acquire substantially all of the assets and intellectual property of CBI for up to $34.5 million in cash and stock. The agreement covers exclusive rights to proprietary technology and intellectual property in developing synthetic peptide-based therapeutics for a variety of indications beyond orthopedics - including oral/maxillofacial bone repair, cardiovascular repair and wound healing. The transaction is expected to close in the third quarter of 2004.

The company's vision is to become a worldwide leader in fracture healing, spinal repair and orthopedic soft tissue repair.
